Joanna is a consultant with Crestview Strategy, working out of the Ottawa office. Joanna utilizes her academic and professional experiences, both in Canada and abroad, to offer a unique perspective while creating effective government relations and communication strategies.

Prior to joining Crestview, Joanna worked as a public affairs professional where she applied her strengths in evaluating, analyzing, identifying key business drivers and stakeholder impacts to a variety of sectors. Joanna's experience intersects the public and private sector in a number of areas including pay equity compensation and human resources, product management and program operations, business and financial services, and international research and policy.

While working in Washington, D.C., Joanna developed and implemented major fundraising and stakeholder engagement initiatives at a leading U.S. think-tank focusing on policy analysis, exchange, and communication on energy related issues in Western Hemisphere affairs.

Joanna holds an Honours Bachelor of Arts in History with a Specialization in Russian, Colonial, and African History from the University of Ottawa. She is currently a Master's candidate at the University of Ottawa's Graduate School of Public and International Affairs with a focus on political communication.
